BAIS MEDRASH OF HAVERSTRAW

שבת פרשת וארא תשפ"ו

דבר תורה

By: R' Shmuel T. Adler

The experience described at the end of last week's Parsha Shemos, seems extremely miserable. The Jews are already at the end of their rope, barely hanging on, when Moshe Rabbeinu and Aharon HaKohen come marching in with the claim they will make the situation easier on them. All they accomplish is even more backbreaking torturous labor for Bnei Yisroel. For good reason, everyone is upset. Yet the key is that it seems like this was bad. As we all know the end of the story, Moshe and Aharon's communications with Pharaoh set the ball rolling for the eventual end of the galus, freeing the Jewish nation from Egyptian tyranny. As mere mortal human beings, we have an extremely limited view. Of no fault of our own, we only see what's right in front of us which can really tear us down. I recently shared during a speech the idea that a big key to happiness is to shlep ourselves above the immediate image we have. Our minds are tricked into honing in only on the external, blocking our broader view. We may have a friend who has a really nice house, one that we only wish we could afford. As we drive past, our imagination conjures up images of people who are constantly happy. The pangs of jealousy begin creeping in, wishing we had what they had. Guess what? It is not real! We produce entire portfolios in our head about what this person and that neighbor has – and it is ALL FICTION!!

Our son is a delicious smiley zeeseit, while he is constantly attached to a trach and vent, can barely move his legs . . . and has never yet stepped foot into our home. One day I was doing his cares together with his nurse, Pat, who herself had a young baby boy at home who apparently was perfectly healthy, in her house with her ever since he was born, walking, talking, breathing on his own, etc. . . . but also very lively, keeping her on her toes. She looked at me and said sincerely, "your Josh is such a smiley good boy, I would take him in place of my son, any day!" I was complimented, but even more floored at how shallow her view was. Two weeks ago Motzaei Shabbos I saw two sets of bright green flashing lights followed by a red flashing light flying through the sky, looking like a huge flying structure; after a few moments they spread out and it seemed more apparent that it was three different helicopters flying; still the flashing lights were different than I had ever seen. The next day I heard that the U.S. went on a pleasure trip to Venezuela and brought their dear president Maduro back home for a ride; they had a video clip showing that at one point Maduro was flown from a base in upstate NY, not too far from Haverstraw, and taken to Manhattan – and there were three helicopters seen landing in Manhattan, the first two had bright flashing green lights and the last one had bright red flashing lights. Aside for feeling a need to share this cool phenomenon!, this lesson occurred to me – there is always more to a story than we are aware of. A Yid I know, we'll call Max, had not had children for a number of years and lived in an apartment in a slightly nicer area than most of his colleagues. A friend of his told him that he overheard someone saying, "Wow Max is so lucky, he's got it all, living in such a fancy area". The guy knew only that Max had a nice apartment; somehow from that, extrapolating how easy and grandiose Max's life must be!

The beginning of this week's parsha is an excellent follow up in providing this perspective. The posuk says (6:2) that Hashem tells Moshe "Ani Hashem" which Rashi expounds on "ne'eman leshalem sechar tov le'mis'halchim lefanay." Let us have a little faith in Hashem – and we will merit to see so many yeshuos!
